

ABSTRACT

A system for providing a site specific location of a device, such as a particular piece of office equipment or medical equipment, includes a receiving system, a conversion system, and an output system. The receiving system receives coordinate information from a device. The conversion system converts the received coordinate information to site specific location information of the device. The output system outputs the site specific location information of the device.